Re: Adalytics Reports Are YouTube Advertisers Inadvertently Harvesting Data From Millions of Children? and Is there evidence of behaviorally targeted / “personalized” ads serving on “made for kids” channels?

Chair Khan, Commissioner Bedoya, and Commissioner Slaughter:

Fairplay, Center for Digital Democracy (CDD), and the undersigned organizations urge the Federal Trade Commission to investigate new revelations about YouTube, LLC and Google, LLC. New research conducted by Adalytics¹, as well as Fairplay’s own research, raises serious questions about whether Google is violating the Children’s Online Privacy Protection Act (COPPA),² the companies’ 2019 settlement with the Commission and the State of New York,³ and Section 5 of the FTC Act.⁴ Reports on YouTube ad campaigns from Fairplay and Adalytics indicate that Google and YouTube permit and report on behavioral ad targeting on “made for kids” videos, even though neither should be possible under COPPA. In addition, it is unclear whether YouTube is surreptitiously using cookies and identifiers to track viewers of “made for kids” videos across time and websites and share that data with data brokers, brands, and ad tech companies. We urge the Commission to determine the extent and purpose of these apparent data collection practices, and to determine whether YouTube and Google are using the data of children under 13 to target them with advertising. All violations of COPPA and the FTC Act should be addressed to the full extent of the Commission’s authority, up to and including financial penalties, algorithmic disgorgement, and a ban on monetizing the personal data of minors.

Fairplay (then Campaign for a Commercial-Free Childhood), CDD, and 21 additional organizations filed a Request for Investigation with the FTC in 2018 complaining that YouTube was engaging in COPPA violations through its online video and advertising network services.⁵ In 2019, the Commission and the State of New York filed a complaint against YouTube and Google for violations of COPPA, the COPPA Rule, and Section 5 of the FTC Act.⁶ The complaint highlighted the impermissible conduct detailed in Fairplay and CDD’s request for investigation. Specifically, it alleged that YouTube and Google had actual knowledge that they were collecting personal information from users of child-directed channels on YouTube, which made the companies operators of a website or online service directed to children, but the defendants did not provide notice or obtain verifiable parental consent as required under COPPA.⁷ The parties settled the complaint in 2019. Under the terms of the settlement, YouTube and Google were required to develop and maintain a system for YouTube channel owners to designate videos as child-directed. The settlement also reinforced YouTube and Google’s obligation to comply with COPPA.⁸

YouTube and Google could have complied with COPPA following their settlement with the Commission and New York by providing notice and obtaining verifiable parental consent before collecting any personal information from child users. But the companies have instead assertedly complied with COPPA by applying specific policies to “made for kids” videos. YouTube’s CEO announced at the time of the settlement that the company would treat all the data from videos for children as coming from children; limit data collection to “only to what is needed to support the operation of the service;” and eliminate personalized advertising on those videos.⁹ A YouTube help page about “made for kids” videos says, “Most importantly, we don’t serve personalised ads on children’s content, as required by the US Children’s Online Privacy Protection Act (COPPA) and/or other applicable laws.”¹⁰

However, Adalytics’ and Fairplay’s investigations indicate that YouTube and Google are in violation of COPPA and the settlement. The companies appear to be collecting behavioral data from users watching “made for kids videos,” thereby engaging in personal data collection beyond what is necessary to support the internal operation of its service. Fairplay’s own ad buy test corroborates findings in Adalytics’ most recent report and raises the possibility that ads on “made for kids” video are personalized, not contextual. This conclusion calls into question Google’s contention that the personal identifiers Adalytics observed on “made for kids” videos are only used for permissible business purposes. These findings should be investigated for violations of COPPA and Section 5 of the FTC Act.

Specifically, we have identified at least four areas that are ripe for FTC investigation:

1. The FTC Should Investigate Whether Google and YouTube Track Users Watching “Made for Kids” Videos

Fairplay ran its own test ad purchase on YouTube in order to examine the veracity of Google and YouTube’s claim that it treats all users watching “made for kids” videos as children. The test is documented in full in the appendix of this letter. On YouTube, Fairplay selected a series of attributes and affinities for ad targeting, such as “retiring soon” and “cloud service power users.” Fairplay then instructed Google to only run the ads on a list of 996 channels that Google and YouTube have identified as “made for kids.” Our $10 ad campaign resulted in 1,446 impressions across 46 “made for kids” channels such as Miraculous Ladybug and CVS 3D Rhymes and Kids’ Song. An “Audience Segment Report” provided by Google confirmed that Fairplay’s ads reached viewers with its desired characteristics. For example, 432 of those 1,466 ad impressions came from users identified by Google as “motorcycle enthusiasts,” and 70 impressions came from “cloud services power users.”¹¹

Similar results were reported by Adalytics in a supplement to its August 17 report. Adalytics reviewed four behaviorally targeted advertising campaigns that ran entirely on channels identified by YouTube as “made for kids.”¹² According to Adalytics, the placement reports that Google delivered to the ad buyers for these four campaigns all reported impressions and/or views on specific user audience segments. These audience segments included affinity segments such as “high-end computer aficionados” and “motorcycle enthusiasts.”¹³

Fairplay’s ad campaign also yielded a Parental Status Report that indicted the number of users who saw the ad who are identified as “parent” (7 impressions), “not a parent” (4 impressions), or “parental status unknown” (578 impressions).¹⁴ Similarly, the campaigns reviewed by Adalytics provided the ad buyers with data about the parental status of users.¹⁵

If YouTube and Google are treating all viewers of “made for kids” videos as children in order to comply with COPPA, the companies should not possess and should not be able to provide an ad buyer with this type of behavioral data about viewers of these videos. Under the COPPA Rule, YouTube and Google may not collect, use, or maintain “personal information” from child users without notice and verifiable parental consent.¹⁶ If YouTube and Google were actually treating the viewers of “made for kids” videos and channels as children, the companies would not know which viewers are “motorcycle enthusiasts” or “cloud services power users.”

In response to Adalytics’ August 17 report, Google has claimed that all ads that run on “made for kids” channels are contextual and not personalized.¹⁷ As described below, both Adalytics’ and Fairplay’s findings raise questions about the veracity of that claim. But even if the ads in our experiment were contextual, the company should not have known and should not have been able to report that the advertisement was viewed by users with any of the attributes Fairplay selected. Further, our findings are not an anomaly: advertisers told Adalytics and reporters that they repeatedly encounter difficulty with their ads running on “made for kids” content.¹⁸

The Commission should investigate the extent to which this personalized ad tracking violates COPPA and the terms of the 2019 settlement. The Commission should also investigate whether YouTube’s statements that they treat all viewers of “made for kids” content as children is deceptive under Section 5 of the FTC Act.¹⁹

2. The FTC Should Investigate Whether Google and YouTube Serve Personalized Ads on “Made for Kids” YouTube Channels

As described above, Fairplay ran a test ad campaign where it selected a series of attributes and affinities for ad targeting, such as “retiring soon” and “cloud service power users.” Fairplay then instructed Google to only run the ads on a list of 996 channels that Google and YouTube have identified as “made for kids,” and Google ran the ads. Adalytics’ supplemental report describes four test ad campaigns that similarly specified specific audience segment attributes. One of those campaigns was also configured to exclude users Google has identified as parents.²⁰ All four of the campaigns in the Adalytics report successfully ran on YouTube on videos tagged as “made for kids.”

In theory, both the Fairplay ad campaign and those described by Adalytics should have resulted in zero placements, because under Google and YouTube’s stated policy, no personalized ads are supposed to run on “made for kids” videos. It should not have been possible under YouTube’s stated policies to target viewers based on either behavioral audience segments or parental status. Yet, as noted above, Fairplay’s campaign resulted in over 1,400 impressions on “made for kids” channels.²¹ Adalytics reported similar results: in each of the test campaigns it observed, all of the ads targeting specific viewer attributes and affinities ran on “made for kids” channels.²²

²⁰ Adalytics Report 2, supra note 1, at 3, 5.

²¹ Appendix, Managed Placements Report.

²² Adalytics Report 2, supra note 1.

Even further, the reports that were generated at the end of Fairplay’s initial test campaign reveal that Google attributed a user audience segment to every ad impression. The Audience Segment Report says that the total number of audience segment impressions 1,446.²³ The Managed Placements Report shows the exact same number of total impressions – 1,446.²⁴ From this, it seems that Google and YouTube not only targeted the ad attributes we identified on “made for kids” videos but that every impression was targeted to a viewer with one of our desired attributes. Google told the New York Times that ad placements on “made for kids” videos are contextual.²⁵ As described above, it is impermissible for Google and YouTube to even collect and track these behavioral attributes under COPPA. But even if such audience tracking could somehow be defined as “contextual,” it defies credulity that Google could “contextually” capture these audience attributes 100 percent of the time. Ads placed contextually based on a platform’s predictions about the kind of viewer who will watch a given piece of content will never be right every time. These findings suggest that either the ads on “made for kids” videos are either behaviorally targeted, or Google is misleading advertisers about the efficacy of its ads in the Audience Segment Report.

Ultimately, only a body with investigative authority, such as the Commission, can conclusively determine whether Google and YouTube are engaging in behavioral advertising. Accordingly, we urge the Commission to investigate the extent to which the ads served on “made for kids” videos are personalized. Any personalization would be a violation of COPPA and the 2019 settlement. Such personalization would also potentially violation Section 5 of the FTC Act given YouTube’s public assurances that it does not deliver personalized ads on “made for kids” videos.²⁶

3. The FTC Should Investigate Google’s and YouTube’s Use of Identifiers on Made for Kids Videos and the Potential Transmission of Such Data to Third Parties

YouTube is using identifiers that appear to be tracking user activity on videos “made for kids.” Under the COPPA Rule, YouTube and Google may not collect, use, or maintain “personal information” from child users without notice and verifiable parental consent.²⁷ Persistent identifiers constitute the “personal information” of a child user:

A persistent identifier that can be used to recognize a user over time and across different Web sites or online services. Such persistent identifier includes, but is not limited to, a customer number held in a cookie, an Internet Protocol (IP) address, a processor or device serial number, or unique device identifier.²⁸

²⁴ Appendix, Managed Placements Report.

²⁵ Grant et al., New York Times, supra note 1.

²⁶ Wojcicki, supra note 9 (“We will also stop serving personalized ads on this content entirely[.]”).

²⁷ 16 C.F.R. Part 312.

²⁸ 16 C.F.R. § 312.2.

Operators do not have to obtain parental consent for persistent identifiers that are not combined with other personal information and are used “for the sole purpose of providing support for the internal operations of the Web site or online service.”²⁹

Despite Google and YouTube’s purported data limitation approach, Adalytics found that YouTube sets persistent, immutable identifiers on “made for kids” videos that transmit data to its servers. The report details how the identifiers at question – the NID, ANID, and IDE cookies – are identified as “advertising” functionality cookies under Google’s own taxonomy.³⁰ Adalytics found that when a user with a brand new Chrome browser profile with no prior browsing history, cookies, or session data watched a video on a “made for kids” channel, YouTube set the persistent IDE cookie in the user’s browser.³¹

Adalytics also reports that on its iOS mobile app, YouTube appears to be sharing ephemeral identifiers with advertisers’ websites to track activity such as advertising click-through rates, even when the advertisement was on a video tagged as “made for kids.”³² The report finds that when viewers click on these ads, data on those viewers is shared with dozens of data brokers.³³ These identifiers constitute personal information under the COPPA Rule’s definition, which refers to an identifier that can “recognize a user over time and across different Web sites or online services.”³⁴ We urge the Commission to investigate the ways in which these “ephemeral” identifiers track user data across time and websites in order to benefit YouTube, Google, and third parties, including data brokers, brands, and ad tech companies.

Following Adalytics’ August 17 report, Google argued that the persistent identifiers described are used to for business purposes permitted under COPPA and not readable by third parties.³⁵ The Fairplay and Adalytics findings above cast doubt on the veracity of these claims.

Ultimately, the use of a personal identifier on a “made for kids” video for the purpose of profiling a specific user or targeting them with advertising would clearly exceed COPPA’s “internal operations” exception.³⁶ The FTC should investigate the extent to which Google and YouTube’s use and sharing of identifiers on “made for kids” videos is a violation of COPPA and the 2019 settlement. The FTC should also investigate whether YouTube’s public assertion that it “will limit data collection and use on videos made for kids only to what is needed to support the operation of the service” is deceptive in violation of Section 5 of the FTC Act.³⁷

³⁷ Wojcicki, supra note 9.

4. The FTC Should Investigate Advertisements of Google Products on “Made for Kids” Videos

Finally, the Commission should investigate Google and YouTube’s advertisement of the companies’ own products on “made for kids videos” as potential violations of both COPPA and Section 5. Adalytics’ report finds that Google and YouTube set advertising personalization cookies and trackers on advertisements for Google’s own products on “made for kids” videos.³⁸ The report notes that when a child clicks on an ad for a Google product on a “made for kids” video, “Google’s ad product website proceeds to set ad targeting & personalization cookies on the child’s device, and put the child into a ‘re-targeting’ audience pool for future ad personalization in Google’s own product advertising campaigns.”³⁹ There is no question that Google and YouTube, as both the operators of the platform running the ads and owners of the products advertised, have actual knowledge these ads containing trackers are running on videos for children. The FTC should investigate this conduct as a violation of COPPA, the 2019 settlement, and Section 5 of the FTC Act.

Conclusion

Violations of COPPA, the parties’ settlement, and YouTube’s own promises to users put children at risk and are a flagrant abuse of the public’s trust and the Commission’s authority. Following Adalytics’ August 17 report, Google has emphasized that it offers an option to exclude “Content Suitable for Families” on its Performance Max advertising product.⁴⁰ Subsequent reporting has underscored the fact that many ad buyers find this option ineffective and/or insufficient to prevent their ads from running on “made for kids” content.⁴¹ Ultimately, the existence of such a check box option is immaterial if Google and YouTube are engaging in data collection and tracking practices that violate COPPA, the FTC Act, or the settlement agreement. The companies have an obligation to comply with the law, not to provide advertisers the option to do so.

We strongly encourage the Commission to seek robust remedies for any violations, including but not limited to:

- Civil penalties that demonstrate that continued violations of COPPA and Section 5 of the FTC Act are unacceptable. Under current law, online operators can be fined $50,120 per violation of COPPA.⁴² Given the immense popularity of many “made for kids” videos, it is likely millions of violations have occurred, suggesting the Commission should seek civil penalties upwards of tens of billions of dollars.
- An injunction requiring relinquishment of all ill-gotten gains

⁴² <https://www.ftc.gov/business-guidance/resources/complying-coppa-frequently-asked-questions>

- An injunction requiring disgorgement of all algorithms trained on impermissibly collected data
- A prohibition on the monetization of minors' data
- An injunction requiring YouTube to move all "made for kids" videos to YouTube Kids and remove all such videos from the main YouTube platform. Given the companies' repeated failures to comply with COPPA on the main YouTube platform – even when operating under a consent decree – these videos should be cabined to a platform that has not been found to violate existing privacy law
- The appointment of an independent "special master" to oversee Google's operations involving minors and provide the Commission, Congress, and the public semi-annual compliance reports for a period of at least five years

We appreciate the Commission's attention to this matter.

After the campaign concluded, Fairplay downloaded the final Audience Segment Report, Parental Status Report, and Managed Placements Report, all attached below.

The Managed Placements Report demonstrates that the entire campaign – 1,446 total placements – all ran on the “made for kids” channels that Fairplay identified when it set up the campaign. The Parental Status Report breaks down the parental status of all 1,446 placements into three categories: Parent, Not a Parent, or Unknown. The Audience Segment Report indicates that each impression was targeted at one of the 21 audience segments to which the campaign was targeted. As described in the letter above, under COPPA Google and YouTube should not possess and should not share this type of user-specific data about users watching “made for kids” videos.
